Sounds fine to me.

Hi Paul and Dan,

If you would consider making this an online discussion, I would be interested in joining to understand more about how this is going from a community engagement perspective.

It does appear that many groups are concerned with the approach, and I'm not suggesting they shouldn't be. However, I also know that many small local government bodies struggle with the resources to effectively communicate the rationale behind decision-making. I'm concerned that we may not have access to the full scope of available information here, so I'd be curious to speak directly to Dan to see if there are more materials that need to get disseminated in order for people to make informed choices about their positions on local matters.

Let me know if the two of you would consider making this a Zoom call so I could join.

Dan,

It would be good to talk. When are you available again.

Next week or after is good for me.

Paul. If you'd like my perspective on this material I'd be happy to talk to you. I am on a few days off so if you'd like to suggest a time please do. And I'd be interested in your perception of an "authoritarian style" given 3 plus years of community consultation and more to come.

We just became aware of this organization. This link will take you to the website which indicates a broader application of the authoritarian style we are seeing with the shoreline protection proposal for Keats Island.

This feels very uncomfortable.

Please have a look.
